

RELATIONSHIPS WITH NGOS, REGIONAL AND NATIONAL GOVERNMENT

In general, it is well known that the Sustainable Development Goals (SDG) were designed to achieve a more sustainable future for the entire world population. These SDGs address the global challenges that we live day by day, among which are including those related to poverty, inequality, climate change, environmental degradation, peace and justice. It is worth noting that the 17 SDGs are all linked, and the goal is to attain them all until 2030.

SDGs address a number of complex social, economic, and environmental challenges, which requires transformations in how societies and economies function and how we interact with our planet, if we want them to be properly implemented. Thus, to cover these challenges, education, research, innovation and leadership are essential. Since universities have extensive experience about creation and dissemination of knowledge and have acquired a unique position in the society, to play an important role in the attainment of the SDGs.
